Sandy Schuman: An Example Weekend Program

Friday Evening: Lucky Numbers

My father had a uniquely Jewish method for selecting his lottery numbers. Years after he told me about his lucky numbers I began to wonder about their significance.

Saturday Morning: When I Was Small

It's the end of the service and everyone is eager for Kiddush. After all, we read Torah, heard a beautiful Musaf service, sang songs, and even heard the announcements. Anything more would be anticlimactic. And yet we insist on concluding the service with one more song: the old, familiar, Adon Olam. The only question is, which tune?

Saturday Evening: Welcome to Chelm's Pond

The legendary fools of Chelm have migrated to a new home where "every acre is two acres, you can till the soil with a teaspoon, and there are not only four seasons, there are five!"

Bloomie is the ambitious proprietor of The Broiled Beet—serving the finest in Adirondack-Ashkenazick fusion cuisine—and the kindest and sincerest *sheyne meyd*l in all of Chelm's Pond.

Adirondack Mendel is the renowned Adirondack guide who always tells the truth even if he has to lie to do it. When they are brought together by Aufruf, the Yiddishe dog, they fall in love.

Guided by Rabbi Chayim Shmayim, the oldest and wisest chokhem in Chelm's Pond, the results raise serious questions about the nature of God and the meaning of prayer, but in a way that could happen only in Chelm's Pond.

Sunday morning: *How to Tell a Jewish Story In this workshop we use stories to illustrate what contributes to making a story Jewish. Next, we practice telling Jewish stories and learn what we can do to tell them better. This workshop is for beginners—teenagers, educators, grandparents—who want to learn or sharpen their storytelling skills and who have a particular interest in Jewish stories.
